Bill Eager ▾

When conceiving a plan for Muse, the first order of business for Bill Eager—the landscape architect who founded SGS2 and is a partner in the Sieger Suarez architectural firm—was to ensure that the residential building would cohere with its surroundings. So he continued the Medjool date palms and silver buttonwood trees on Collins Avenue and the public beach walk, respectively. Also look for masses of red tip cocoplum to become interspersed with pitch apple, saw palmetto and green buttonwood. siegersuarez.com; musesummyisles.us

Rhett Roy ▲

Thirty-six years of landscape work around the world have prepared the Fort Lauderdale-based Rhett Roy for one of its buzziest commissions to date: the 7-acre grounds of The Ritz-Carlton Residences, Miami Beach. Large trees, such as gumbo limbos, live oaks, sabal palms and royal poincianas will provide canopy cover, while timber bamboo species will grace the exterior of the building along the waterfront villas for a lush look and feel. The highlight of the main lobby view will be a striking sea grape tree with outstretched low-lying branches that will extend upward into a curled and twisted natural sculpture. rhettroy.com; theresidencesmiami.com

Dylan Terry ▶

The ultralocavore evangelist Dylan Terry is on a mission to blanket the state with edible greenscapes via his company Ready-to-Grow Gardens. To that end, he's installing 15 such beds in five projects from The Related Group, starting with Brickell Heights, his largest commission to date. The beds here will feature a variety of vegetables and herbs, which Terry and his team will maintain once a month and encourage residents to partake in their upkeep. ready-to-grow.com; brickellheights.com
